How to Win In the Game of Headball

By CHARLES R. BARRETT, Superintendent of the Chicago Athenaeum

RESPECT, COURTESY, PATIENCE, SYMPATHY AND INFLUENCE ARE IMPORTANT QUALITIES WE SHOULD ACQUIRE AND EXERCISE AS THE RESULT OF EDUCATION.

Care of the hair, the teeth, the nails and the general attire are marks of the educational influence we enjoy. They indicate our regard for the opinions and impressions of others. Such thoughtful persons win the esteem of inferiors and superiors. These are winning points in the game of life.

In the games of baseball, football, golf and tennis, how carefully the players watch and exercise every vantage point! How carefully the individual football player is trained in the development of skill! BUT HEADBALL IS A GREATER GAME THAN FOOTBALL. It requires closer application, greater energy, a longer struggle, and the reward is correspondingly greater. The player at sport will take a hint, will often originate playing points and apply them to the game with all the energy of his mind and body.

The same person, playing the game of life, may be dull and careless when judged by the employer. He will lack punctuality, industry, interest and appearance when he must know that his means of existence and happiness depend upon his observance of the playing points in the game, in which the rewards are numerous, liberal and permanent.

The young man of neat appearance, good manners, who is careful and energetic in his work and watchful of opportunities will sooner or later be in line and a force in the affairs of man.

EXPLOSION IN LEADVILLE.

Dynamite Wrecks Shaft House and Results in One Death.

Leadville, Colo., June 10.—Two hundred and fifty pounds of giant powder exploded in the shaft house of the Fortune mine this morning, destroying the shaft house and machinery. Five men were entombed in the mine until 5 o'clock, when all were rescued excepting Superintendent Patrick Barker, who was found dead in the bottom of the shaft with his head cut off. Superintendent Barker had climbed up the Fortune shaft, and it is supposed he was struck by falling timbers.

VOTING CONTEST.

Miss Zora Burnett, who yesterday morning at the beginning of the voting, stood third on the list of contestants for the Goddess of Liberty honors, has taken a decided jump to first place. Her total vote up to the closing hour last night is 110. None of the other contestants cast any votes, but it is thought that many are reserving their strength until the last days of the voting, when it is expected they will endeavor to spring a surprise on the present leaders. Below is the standing:

Zora Burnett	110
Josie Moore	90
Carrie Coles	85
Lottie Jones	70
Bertha Wittig	14
Cloyd Thomas	12

GRAND CANYON WILD MAN.

An Additional Attraction Has Been Provided at the Great Gorge.

The people of Arizona duly appreciate the fact that they have in the Grand Canyon the greatest attraction for tourists that the world affords, but they have silently mourned the absence of exciting features in connection with the wonderful gorge. Says the Republican: Every little Jim Crow seashore resort has its sea serpent, but the Grand Canyon has been under a serious handicap in having nothing but its own scenery wherewith to thrill visitors. The shortage has been remedied, however. The canyon has a wild man. We know it harbors a wild man, for the San Francisco Examiner is authority for the story, and the Examiner never lies—at least it does not always admit that it is lying. And, anyway, people are hard to please who insist upon the affidavit with each story that appears in the Sunday supplements of the yellow journals. Our citizens should not fail to take along a camera for protection against the wild man. But here is the story:

Many strange stories have been told of the "wild man" of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and while some persons have credited these weird tales, they have for the most part been regarded as the ingenious inventions of imaginative travelers, and have passed into tradition as such. But according to L. W. Stevens of Cedar, Colorado, the "wild man" is not a myth, and he gives a thrilling account of an encounter he had with the creature.

"Two years ago," says Mr. Stevens, "I had business in the northwestern part of Arizona that took me in the neighborhood of the extreme lower end of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado river, in Mohave county, Arizona. Having the misfortune of getting my arm broken, I took a trip to the river to kill time and catch a few beaver. I constructed a skiff, with the aid of a friend, and when my arm got strong enough, I took a trip up the Canyon as far as I could go with a boat. A few miles above the entrance I hauled my boat upon the sand and got ready to examine the rock walls.

"The first thing that attracted my attention was the imprint of bare feet in the sand. Thinking the tracks had been made by some Indian, perhaps a Piute or a Hualapi, I began looking the gorge over with much interest. Going down stream a short distance I found more tracks.

"The third day of my stay I saw the head of a man on a bench of rocks on the north side of the river. Evidently he was seated on the edge of a cliff some distance above my camp. I rowed up stream a little above the point where I saw the man's head and part of his shoulders above the greasewood brush. Climbing up to the bench I had some difficulty in finding a place that I could get over the ledge and be on a level with my strange neighbor.

"I finally succeeded in approaching closer to the point. I saw sitting on a large boulder a man with long white hair and matted beard that reached to his knees. The creature was unaware of my approach, and I gazed upon him for some moments unobserved. He was about forty yards away and in full view. He wore no clothing, and upon his talon-like fingers were claws at least two inches long. A coat of gray hair nearly covered his body, with here and there a spot of dirty skin showing. I had found the 'wild man' of the rocks!

"At that moment a rock loosened by some animal came rolling down. The creature turned his face toward me. Horrors! What a face—it was seared and burned brown by the sun, with fiery green eyes. With a wild whoop and a leap he was up over rocks and cliffs like a mountain sheep for about seventy-five yards. Then he stopped. He was armed with a queer shaped club, large enough to fell an ox. Brandishing this bludgeon, he shrieked and chattered for a moment, then started toward me, roaring and still flourishing his weapon. Faster and faster he came and my hair began to stiffen.

"I am a poor runner, so I stood my ground. When the creature was within about fifteen yards of me I raised my rifle to fire, thinking to cripple him. As I glanced along the barrel I heard a growl just above the wild man. He also had heard the growl and braced himself for the shock.

"I drew a heavy bead on the cougar and pressed the trigger. When the smoke had cleared away the mother cougar lay dead where the wild man stood. The man himself had disappeared. The two young cougars were still on the rock, apparently greatly frightened by the report and echoes of my old Sharp's rifle.

"Reaching hastily for a cartridge, I found I had neglected to buckle on my belt when leaving camp, so I hastily retreated to the boat, where I found everything as I had left it. I shoved the boat off and drifted toward camp, which was near the cougars. There lay the old cougar where she had fallen. The wild man was standing over the two cubs, which also were dead, he having beat the life out of them with a club. He stood a moment gazing on the carcasses, then got down on hands and knees and drank the warm blood as it flowed from the death wounds. The sight sickened me.

"I stood up in the boat and yelled. The man sprang to his feet, took a long look at me, then fled up from the ledge, where he stopped. Here he scourished his club again and screamed the wildest, most unearthly screech I ever heard, then turned and sprang up the craggy wall of the canyon. "Not fancying my wild neighbor, I backed my outfit into the boat and drifted down and out of the canyon before I made camp for the night. That was the strangest adventure of my life.

"Tradition records that years ago hostile Indians captured three men, bound them to logs far up the canyon and cast them adrift upon the swollen river. It may be that this wild creature is one of those unfortunate men who, by chance, freed himself and escaped death, but was made insane by his awful experience."

Education and Philanthropy.

The year 1902 has been notable for its developments in the line of educational and philanthropic work.

It would of course be impossible to give in figures the amount which was donated during the year for educational, religious and philanthropic purposes. A statistician who has given much thought to these matters thinks that the benevolences of the year, made through organized bodies, would aggregate more than $100,000,000.

During the year gratifying progress was made in the establishment at Washington of a national university, for which Andrew Carnegie gave $10,000,000 about a year ago. An organization has been effected under congressional authorization, with Dr. Gilman, formerly of Johns Hopkins university, as the head of the institution.

Steps were also taken by many colleges and universities in this country to make available to American students the provisions of the late Cecil Rhodes' munificent bequest of $50,000,000 for scholarships in Oxford university.

The latest educational and philanthropic proposition is for the founding of a great national university, embracing a wide range of knowledge and extending far into the realm of original research. For this it is understood that certain New York millionaires have pledged $15,000,000 as a nucleus for the settlement, and a bill is already before congress for its authorization and establishment at the national capital.

An event which may fairly be termed both educational and philanthropic was the visit to this country of Professor Adolf Lorenz, the distinguished Austrian orthopedic surgeon, and the demonstrations given by him before the medical faculties of many American cities of his treatment of congenital deformities of children. It was not only the means of relieving many cases of suffering, but gave an impetus to bloodless surgery from which must come incalculable benefits. An immediate outcome will unquestionably be the establishment of an orthopedic hospital and college in Chicago, and doubtless in the near future others in various centers of population, where the child of the poor as well as the rich may be treated and cured of congenital deformities which have hitherto in the main baffled medical science.

Late Hours and Long Life.

A German doctor who has been collecting information about the habits of long lived persons finds that the majority of those who attained old age indulged in late hours. Eight out of ten persons over eighty never went to bed till well into the small hours and did not get up again till late in the day.

To Purify Water.

An ounce of powdered alum stirred into a hoghead of putrid water will render it sweet and fit for use in the course of a few hours.

Edible Mushrooms in China.

Large quantities of fungi are eaten by the Chinese of every province, and some have medical or dietetic properties assigned to them. The polipori or boboli are generally preferred to the agarics, so largely eaten in Europe.

A Tenant's Revenge.

In revenge for his landlord's refusal to paint his house an Antwerp tenant has hung out this text: "At the Sign of the Dirty Front."

Compulsory Religion.

To such an extent does religion prevail at Gonotao, in the south seas, that every man, woman and child on that island who does not go to church at least three times a week is liable to be arrested and fined, the fine going to the king.

Tourists in Italy.

Foreign tourists annually spend in Italy $60,000,000. Rome almost entirely lives on her foreign and provincial visitors.

Church Division.

It is stated that in the historic village of Hermannsburg, in Germany, there are four kinds of independent Lutheran churches, each of which refuses to recognize the other or to practice altar and pulpit fellowship.

Dreams.

Dreams, says a scientist, are promoted by warmth and chilled by the cold. Hence the Asiatics are rich dreamers, while the Eskimos sleep as sound as icebergs.

The Balata Tree.

It is much more difficult to bleed the balata tree, from which gutta percha is derived, than the india rubber tree. But an expert at the work can obtain from forty to fifty pounds of the gum daily.
